1,000 Hull school pupils to learn Mandarin Chinese
By Hull Daily Mail | Posted: February 23, 2015

LANGUAGE LESSONS: Aslemeran Cigan Primary
Jessica Collins, nine, with Mandarin Chinese teacher

Every year the British Council runs a competition to find Britain's best young Mandarin speakers. Those that make it through to the last stage of the competition come to London to compete at the British Museum. We went behind scenes of the competition to follow Louis Carmichael, 17, from Hull and Natalia Barton, 13, from Liverpool as they prepared for the final.

Primary schools' complaints

*"...some concerns:
Her ability to manage the behaviour of children;
too much emphasis on craft activities rather than language (one of our brightest year 6s only knows 1 word in Mandarin)..."*

"...Please also bear in mind that according to the British Council's CLA employment status (I am sorry if I didn't make this clear in the first place):

Language assistants are not employed as teachers. They should not be asked to:

- take sole responsibility for whole classes
- supervise or discipline pupils regularly"

"Thank you, Liqun. This is very exciting to be a part of!"
